Instructions on Care of Big Game in the Field

1. Bleed the animal as soon as possible by making deep swinging cut ahead of brisket, turning knife in circular action to sever arteries. Swing body so that knife opening is down hill to allow drainage.

2. Slit belly along central line and around reproductive organs and anus; splitting brisket to the throat. (Use heavy knife or hand axe.) Split pelvis bone. Don't get your hands or your knife contaminated with the musk from the scent gland on the inside of the hind legs, the opening of which is marked by a rosette of short stiff hairs.

3. Remove all contents from body cavity, being careful not to puncture any organ. Wipe abdominal cavity dry with cloth.

4. Skin and quarter immediately. If it is not possible to do so, the animal should be thoroughly propped open with sticks and hung head down in the shade or under good shelter to cool. Keep dry.

Flies do not bother dry meat surfaces. If the animal must be immediately packed to camp and it is not possible to hang it where killed for later removal, if it is skinned and quartered, it can be handled much easier and the meat is less likely to sour than if packed to camp whole with the body cavity closed.

5. Prop open all folds, cut away all loose meat and bloodshot areas around wound. Leave no folds for moisture to collect and harbor fly eggs.

6. Carry cheesecloth bags, good skinning knife, small block and tackle, 50 feet of ¼-inch rope and a hand axe with you. These items are essential to bringing back good meat. In warm weather, to get best results, the quarters of meat should be hung in the shade in cheesecloth bags where air circulation is good.

7. Always bring the animal home skinned and quartered. Do not transport them draped over a fender or in piles in a truck or trailer.

8. When you arrive home, and cold storage is not immediately available, if the above rules have been followed, the quarters can be hung in the shade in a well-ventilated place away from flies and the meat will keep for considerable time.
